

BBC – What were you wearing? <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=51-hepLP8J4>

1. General understanding

- a. What sort of video is this?
- b. Who are the two main characters? Where is it?
conversation is it?

What sort of

2. Detailed understanding

To be mugged:
A font:

- a. What happened to the man?
- b. What is the women’s reaction?
- c. What is the second man reporting and what is the woman’s reaction?
- d. What is the message of the video?

BBC – What were you wearing? <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=51-hepLP8J4>

1. General understanding

- a. What sort of video is this?
- b. Who are the two main characters? Where is it?
conversation is it?

What sort of

2. Detailed understanding

To be mugged:
A font:

- a. What happened to the man?
- b. What is the women’s reaction?
- c. What is the second man reporting and what is the woman’s reaction?
- d. What is the message of the video?

BBC – What were you wearing? <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=51-hepLP8J4>

1. General understanding

- a. What sort of video is this?
- b. Who are the two main characters? Where is it?
conversation is it?

What sort of

2. Detailed understanding

To be mugged:
A font:

- a. What happened to the man?
- b. What is the women’s reaction?
- c. What is the second man reporting and what is the woman’s reaction?
- d. What is the message of the video?

The BBC skit reverses gender roles to highlight the silliness of traditional reactions to rape accusations. The man who wants to report being mugged is facing two female police officers who tries to place the blame on him: they accuse him of wearing something provocatively wealthy. Indeed, for a long time rape victims have been considered as somewhat responsible for what happened to them (like not behaving properly, sending the wrong signals, not dressing properly). We could consider this as a double standard, because society as a whole doesn't have the same attitude to victims depending on whether they are male or female.