Human-AI relations: it's a match! Or is it really...? ✓

While AI is becoming more and more used, as a answer-giver, an expert, or even a friend, some issues start to appear. In this corpus, a scientific publication from New Scientist and a comic from the Los Angeles Times published in 2025 explore new AI-human relations. From the same time period, a contribution from Gabriel et al. in Nature and an article written by T. Waite in Dazed highlight growing risks regarding these relations. Overall, this corpus begs the question: to what extent is AI interfering with human relationships?

Firstly, AI-human relations are growing due to anthropomorphic elements. In fact, as explained in New Scientist, AI is designed to act and interact with humans. Gabriel et al. develop this idea in Nature: human-like elements create deep emotional relations, through processes such as flattery. AI seems
