

~~“Why do people behave in an irrational way when falling in love?”~~

CONSEQUENCES / What happens after 1 year?

Why try to explain rationally sth that is supposed to be irrational ?

Did people really need love to be explained by science? Particularly the day before Valentine's day.

Seeing love like that just makes me want to cry and to want to never feel love.

However, love is unpredictable, the opposite of science

The scientific perspective offers a fresh understanding of romantic love

The article demystifies love without reducing it

How can love be both beneficial and harmful?

Why does love have such a powerful influence on humans?

How does the article show that romantic love has powerful effects on the human brain ?

To what extent can our feelings influence our lifestyle ?

To what extent can love change the way people think, feel and act in everyday life ?

To what extent could love be dangerous or mysterious?

When does love become toxic?

Is love a weakness or strength ?

Is love a danger?

To what extent can love, overtime, push someone's limits, maybe even morals?

To what extent can love be considered as an obstacle to everyday life ?

To what extent does scientific research on romantic love change how we understand human brain ?

To what extent can science help explain the impact of new love on the human brain and behavior?

Do science and society define love in the same way ?

Can love really be described by science ?

How can science understand love?

Can science really explain and describe love ?

To what extent can scientific research ~~understand~~ (explain?) our feelings ?

Do science and society define love in the same way ?

To what extent can science truly explain love ?

Will science be able to understand and control anything that can alter human judgment?

Should science try to – and can it – explain everything?

What's the use of trying to explain the inexplicable?