Types of articles

- News report – informative, fairly short article which main focus is to deliver a piece of information (about an event, a recent piece of news).
- Feature article – longer article that can be less neutral, whose main focus is to provide an analysis and interpretation of the news (more in-depth than a news report).
- Opinion pieces – there are various types but they all focus on sharing an opinion about the news
    - Editorials are written or approved by the editorial board of a newspaper (a committee that decides of the editorial line of the newspaper, the line = the type of ideas/philosophy that is supported by the newspaper/magazine).
    - Op-eds are opinion pieces written by somebody who does not work for the newspaper/magazine (can be a celebrity, a specialist…).
- Column – article written by the same person on a regular basis (the columnist). They don't have to be about news specifically.
- Obituary – about or a tribute to a recently deceased person
- Review – about a book/film/work of art/cultural event. Not neutral, shares the writer's opinion about the object in focus.

Types of articles

- News report – informative, fairly short article which main focus is to deliver a piece of information (about an event, a recent piece of news).
- Feature article – longer article that can be less neutral, whose main focus is to provide an analysis and interpretation of the news (more in-depth than a news report).
- Opinion pieces – there are various types but they all focus on sharing an opinion about the news
    - Editorials are written or approved by the editorial board of a newspaper (a committee that decides of the editorial line of the newspaper, the line = the type of ideas/philosophy that is supported by the newspaper/magazine).
    - Op-eds are opinion pieces written by somebody who does not work for the newspaper/magazine (can be a celebrity, a specialist…).
- Column – article written by the same person on a regular basis (the columnist). They don't have to be about news specifically.
- Obituary – about or a tribute to a recently deceased person
- Review – about a book/film/work of art/cultural event. Not neutral, shares the writer's opinion about the object in focus.